HUNDREDS AT REP. WOMEN'S TEA AT MOKENA

One of the best attended political meetings, given by the Women's Division of Will County was that which was held in the St. John's Evangelical church parlors in Mokena last Friday afternoon, when 275 deeply interested women and men attended the gathering.

The meeting was opened with an invocation by the Rev. H. B. Schaeffer of Trinity Evangelical church in Joliet, former president of the Will County Ministerial Association.

Mrs. Wm. Semmler, precinct committeewoman for Mokena was in charge who extended greetings to those present and led in the pledging of Allegiance to the Flag. All joined in the singing of America.

An outstanding National speaker, Mrs. Catherine English Wetzel of Hamilton, Ohio, teacher in the Hamilton School of Expression and Dramatics and former lecturer of the Redpath Lecture platform, was the first speaker.

Her address was filled with real political oratory which made a deep impression upon the people. In very forceful language, she denounced the communistic tendencies of the New Deal and pointed out the great dangers lurking in the policy of the present administration.

Mrs. Wetzel made a strong appeal for the election of Alf Landon and the entire Republican ticket, and undoubtedly made many votes for the Republican ticket by her eloquent address. She further pointed out that in foreign lands where the dictatorship prevails, liberties as we know them in this country, do not and pointed out that if the American people do not awaken to the grave issues confronting them, the very liberties for which our forefathers fought, will be lost to us.

A rather unique and surprising feature of the program, was a little skit, called, "The March of Time," in which eighteen little tots, all under school age, took part. They were dressed in yellow and brown crepe paper costumes representing sunflowers and each carried a placard with one or two words on them which formed the following sentence: "We don't want to pay your debts. Please don't make any more for us. Give us our opportunity, by voting the straight Republican ticket."

They marched across the platform and down thru the aisles with Miss Velma Klose playing the march and at the close, all joined in singing "Onward Christian Soldiers". This feature went over big and received hearty applause. It's message was more eloquent than words.

Other speakers were: Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill, State Representative, a candidate for re-election. Mrs. O'Neill in her usual straight-from-the-shoulder method, pointed out some of the shocking conditions existing in Springfield. She made it plain that the Democrats are only playing politics and failed to show any interest for the welfare of their constituents. She also dwelt on the fact that Gov. Horner and all his political aids were against the schools of the state and refused to release $7,000,000.00 fund for school purposes when the schools of the state were in very dire need of funds, and that they were responsible for the closing of many of the public schools throughout the rural districts of Illinois. Mrs. O'Neill did not mince words when she scored the Governor and many of the Democratic representatives.

Congressman Chauncey Reed was represented by his secretary Robt. E. Higgins of Joliet. Mr. Higgins outlined some of the communistic workings of the last congress in which Tugwell, and Frankfurter and other cabinet members, bordering on the red or pink tinge, showed that they favored the communistic doctrines of Roosevelt, in preference to our form of government. Mr. Higgins declared that there is quite a striking contrast on the two sides of the Potomac River. One one side is the Capital of the United States with men trying to tear down the very foundations of government which our fore fathers established, while on the other side of the Potomac, in Arlington Cemetery, lie those patriots who fought and died to give us the liberties and blessings of freedom which this nation has enjoyed for over 150 years. He also painted a dramatic word picture of the rubber stamp congress. He showed how bills marked, "MUST", were sent to Congress which meant that they must pass them, regardless of the constitutionality of benefit for the people.

Dennis J. Collins, member of the Illinois Republican State Central Committee Bureau of Speakers, spoke in the absence of Attorney R. Thomas of Washington, D. C. who had been scheduled to appear. Mr. Collins made it very emphatic that the voters of America are facing a grave issue and must use their very best efforts to get all the votes out on November 3. He further declared that the New Deal must be defeated at all costs.

When it came to the County candidates, Paul V. Wunder, who has served Will County very efficiently as Circuit Court Clerk for the past 16 years and who now is a candidate for re-election on the Republican ticket gave a very interesting and revealing address in which he declared that the Democrats claim that President Roosevelt saved the homes of many people through the

MAN OVERCOME IN TREATING TANK NEAR NEW LENOX

Pullmotors were required to revive Lloyd Morgan, 19 years old, of Wilson St., Joliet, as he had been overcome by gas last Monday afternoon while cleaning a treating tank at the Brisbane Pole yards of the Western United Telegraph company, south of New Lenox. Morgan had been lowered into the large tank used to treat poles with creosote and was attempting to clean it with gasoline. Apparently overcome by fumes after being in the tank a short time, he failed to respond to the calls of Arvid Swanson, manager of the yard and then collapsed.

Earl Strassburg, a fellow workman went into the tank through the narrow manhole, tied a rope around Morgan who was then pulled up. A Pulmotor squad was called from the Public Service and the Western United Gas companies of Joliet, and succeeded in reviving Morgan after a half hour. Morgan was little the worse for his experience, the Western United yard office stated.

"That's where we got caught—right there," cried the barber. "We got back to the ponies an' had to cut across a piece of burned timber to get out. A dead limb from one of the trees fell on me. I went down with the pony. When I kicked loose, the pony bolted, an' when I tried to get up, my leg was broke."

"There we was, Doc. Panama's pony couldn't carry double. The fire was creepin' up on two sides of us. It was terrible, Doc—that's all a man can say, just terrible. We couldn't hardly hear us talk. Panama picked me up to set me on his pony. 'No!' I yelled. 'It won't do, Panama, an' you know it. I'm done, Panama. Save yourself. You ain't got a minute to lose. Get back on your horse and run for it.'"

"Shut up, Jake," Panama yelled. "Get up on that pony!" I tried to fight it out with him—but I was crazy with pain 'n' couldn't handle myself, neither. He lifted me on his pony, stuck the lines in my hands. "Beat it," he yelled. "What'll you do?" says I. "I've got good legs, I'll run," he says."

A melancholy procession took the desert road that night for Sleepy Cat. In the wagon lay Panama; beside him lay his injured friend, Spotts—Jake would have it no other way.

In town, next day, the boys tried vainly to figure out some sort of a decent burial service for Panama. The best coffin to be had in Medicine Bend was ordered by telegraph to reach Sleepy Cat on train Number One.

"I've got it," exclaimed Jeff Sollers, who was sitting near Carpy. He slapped the doctor's knee. "We'll have the old Doc himself make a few remarks over Panama."

"No."

"Yes."

"Hell, no! I won't do it," growled Carpy.

They all set on him. "Yes, you will," Carpy was inflexible. "Boys, you might just as well shut up."

"But why won't you?"

"Well, I tell you. I'm just another bum, like poor Panama—that's all. You needn't yell—I know. The way I look at it is this: Nothing in Panama's life became him like the leaving of it. Surely no man could die a nobler death than Panama's. Now I want to see a man who lives a life like Panama's death say a few words over Panama, and I'm going to try to get him to do it. Who? The old padre over on the Reservation?"

"But he won't do it. Panama didn't belong to his church!"

"That doesn't make a d-d bit of difference, boys. The padre knew Panama. He knows me. He will do it—if we're lucky enough to catch him at home and not away fifty miles on a sick call. I've done a few things for Padre Cataldo. I know the man inside and out."

Dr. Carpy called up the padre and was lucky. At least the padre was at home. As to his coming—that was something else again. Carpy held him long on the wire; he pleaded earnestly. At last he agreed to come.

At eight o'clock, the welcome splutter of the dilapidated engine was heard outside. The padre, a Gunlock buck chauffeur, and a little Indian boy of ten or twelve disembarked, and the reception committee welcomed the guest of honor to the hotel office—long well filled. And headed by the clergyman and the little fellow, the growing crowd straggled down the street to Harry Tenison's, where poor Panama lay in state on the rear-most of the pool tables.

Padre Cataldo, laying aside his hat and his overcoat of many patches, made the sign of the cross, knelt a moment in silent prayer, and, standing behind the pool table on which Panama lay in his coffin, spoke clearly and simply.

"Boys," said the old priest, "this looks like a queer place for a padre; perhaps a queer job. But I've known Bill Hayes a good many years. I knew him in his wildest days. And I've known him for the last three years, since he turned over a new leaf."

"Bill used to visit me and talk with me. It was something I said to him once, so he told me, that started him thinking. 'What's all this about—this greedy, rotten old world?' he asked him. 'That doesn't make a damned bit of all to think about?'"

"Bill was not a follower of my faith—you know that. But he believed Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, and for three years he has tried the best he could to keep his commandments and persuade the boys up and down the line to do the same. He told me he wanted to try to do right where he had spent his life trying to do wrong."

"Naturally, I never heard Bill preach. But I have been told what eloquent and sincere sermons he did preach. But out there in those forgotten hills, facing—no, not facing but embracing—a dreadful death, Bill preached a deathless sermon, for he took his next from the lips of God himself. And wherever you bury him, boys, let the words of that text be graven on his tomb:

"Greater love than this no man hath, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

The lull in the fire threat issued in fresh dangers to the hill ranches. A blaze starting up anew on the reservation cut-over lands crept north on the very night that Panama was buried.

With what aid she could bring, Jane rode next morning over to her neighbor's only to find the situation critical. By noon the fire fighters were being driven back all along the line. But, loath to abandon hope of saving the ranch buildings, the men fought till Denison, riding among them, warned them to look first to their own safety.

Riding then fast to the ranch house, he found Jane consulting with Quong in the kitchen.

"I must think of your safety, Jane," he said. "It is getting too close to danger here. You and Quong must go home."

"Bill, is it that bad?"

"We might as well face the truth. It's not safe here for you. You must go, and quickly. Are your ponies saddled?"

"They are."

"Then take Quong and mount up."

Jane's eyes softened. They fell before his. "I just hate to go, Bill," she pouted, tantalizingly. "It seems like deserting a friend."

"It isn't, Jane. You may imagine, girl, how I hate to send you away. But you know who I'm thinking of, don't you?"

"You mustn't think too much of anybody but yourself just now, Bill," she murmured. "I do some thinking myself these days."

Quong had been called. Always foreboding, without any words he was winking and blinking in his saddle.

Denison handed Jane her lines. She leaned toward him and spoke low:

"We Must Do Some More Running Ourselves, Jane."

"Bill, will you promise me, solemnly, one thing?"

"Promise you anything, girl."

"Solemnly, Bill?"

"Solemnly. What is it?"

"That you'll think first for your own safety. Now promise!"

"I promise, Jane."

"For my sake, Bill?"

"Do you mean that?"

"I do mean it."

"God bless you. If the buildings go, I'll ride over to report tomorrow."

The wind died that night with the bloodshot sun, as if to leave in the hearts of its victims a faint hope of escape from the worst of its ravages. Jane slept so well that she opened her eyes in the heavy air of daybreak, conscience-stricken at having rested peacefully during the hours in which her neighbor might have been burned out.

She dressed, ate Quong's hurried breakfast, saddled her pony, and set out for Denison's, directing Quong to follow as soon as he could. The smoke grew more dense as she neared the ridge, and she reluctantly turned about for home and told Quong of her failure and that she would ride up into the high hills to try to see what was going on.

She remounted and rode up the Divide trail. The smoke was so dense that it cut off hope of seeing the valley, and, spurred by the determination to see by riding higher, she rode on and on till she found herself at the foot of Gunlock Knob. Jane headed the pony up the mountain. The summit had never seemed so hard to reach, but, panting and exhausted, the pony carried Jane to the summit, and she rode out on the table to look. The scene below was terrifying. Huge clouds of smoke billowed and spread, only to boil up anew and race on the wind. It seemed as if the whole country were in flames. Here and there tongues of fire shot from the rolling smoke.

Jane sat the pony, fear-stricken and immovable, watching and hoping for a rift in the angry clouds that would reveal the ranch buildings. None came.

Wearily, at length, and depressed, Jane turned her pony's head to ride home. Gunlock itself might be in danger.

Even the pony took the downward trail reluctantly. Jane could not tell why until, rounding a shoulder of the Knob, she saw below her a fire sweeping across the trail she was following. Worse than that, the fire was spurring through the brush, up the mountain, in front of her. The pony balked. Thoroughly frightened, Jane turned him up the narrow trail and headed for the summit.

Even the few moments she had been away from the top had changed the scene. Overwhelmed with consternation, she began to think anew of her own safety. She urged the pony swiftly down the trail again, hoping faintly to find some hidden by-pass. Her path was blocked. The hot air of the fire below was catching at her throat; gusts of smoke burned into her eyes. She reined about to return, despairing, to the summit.

Once again the level rock afforded her temporary refuge. She dismounted. The pony was growing unmanageable. He snorted, stamped, flung his head up and down and chafed frantically at his bit. Hope deserted her. She sank to her knees and fell forward, covering her face with her arms.

For a moment her mind was a blank. She heard nothing of a frantic calling of her name, when a stinging and blackened horseman spurred and lashed his pony toward her, sprang from the saddle, and caught her up in his arms.

"Jane!" he cried, as he looked into her face and shook her in his effort to restore consciousness. "Jane! Open your eyes! Speak to me! It's Bill, Jane, Bill! Can't you hear me? Speak!" Her eyes opened; she looked in a daze at him. "It's Bill, Jane!"

She threw her arms convulsively around his neck. "Oh, Bill, Bill! What can we do? Must we die, Bill, in this horror?"

"No!" he exclaimed. "We can get through. But we mustn't lose a minute, not a second. Come!"

He half carried her to an edge of the summit, where a rock crevice gave a slight footing a few feet below. Into this he lowered himself and raised his arms to Jane.

"But the horses, Bill?" she cried.

"Leave them," he called back. "They may escape. There's no footing for horses where we're going. Quick, Jane! Jump!" He caught her in his arms, steadied her, showed her how to secure herself on the precarious footing, and lowered himself to another slender ledge to brace himself, bade her spring, and caught her again in his arms.

Her heart beat so violently, he seemed to feel it as she hugged close to him. There was barely room for the two to stand. "Keep cool, Jane. We can make it, but be very, very careful of your footing, darling Jane. The fire hasn't touched this side of the mountain yet, but if you fell it would be a hundred feet. Be everlastingly sure of every step, won't you? Never move until I tell you."

Spurred to superhuman effort, Denison achieved the almost impossible, and by sliding, clinging with fingers, hands and arms, and by carefully using his lariat, he managed to bring Jane down unharmed to the foot of the precipitous wall that had given him the bare chance to save her life. He held out his arms to catch her for the final jump. "Bill!" she exclaimed, breathing hard and looking up in sheer amazement at the precipice down which he had brought her. "How did we ever get down there alive?"

He was still very anxious—the wrinkled veins of his smoked forehead plainly mirrored that. She waited for orders. "We must run through that grove of quaking asp and try to get away from the Knob. This will all be burning in a few minutes. Are you able to run?"

"I'll bet I can run faster than you, Bill." The laughing tone of her words thrilled and cheered him. He knew better than she what still lay between them and safety. They hastened on through the light timber; then, running a broad shoulder, they saw a vast panorama of smoke, lighted in places by flames where the virgin pine forests along the mountain slope.

Denison hurried on, Jane briskly keeping pace with him. But when they neared the smoking pine, she felt dismayed.

"Bill, it's all on fire, yet—look at the little blazes. See the ground pine, and the trees are smoking and burning yet. Bill! See the deer running over there—mercy, those are bear running, too—why, every animal you can think of—"

Jane was looking toward an opening in the pines, half a mile away. It was a precipitous flight of the animal life of a whole mountainside from the wrath of a forest fire.

"They'd better run," said Denison grimly. "We must do some more running ourselves, Jane. There's very little danger crossing this strip. But I want to get across it quick."

They dashed into the fire area together. Little tongues of flame darted from the still burning ground, but nothing to threaten Jane's stout laced boots or leather trousers.

They crossed the burned strip and broke together down a long slope that bordered another forest of pine.

Denison paused and looked anxiously at Jane. "How are you standing it, girl?"

She was panting, but game. Her high-colored cheeks, the flashing brightness of her eyes, her parted eager lips, made her a picture.

"Fine, Bill. Are we out of danger?"

They were standing together in the wind and smoke that swirled and eddied up the mountain. His hand was at her back as she leaned on his arm. Perhaps overwhelmed by the thought of what he must say, he hugged her close and, drawing her unresisting lips to his own, held them in a long kiss. "I wish we were, Jane. We're going only now into danger—I wish it weren't so, Jane."

Lesson for October 25

CHRISTIANITY AS LOVE

LESSON TEXT—Acts 18:1-4; I Corinthians 13.

GOLDEN TEXT—And now abideth faith, hope, charity (love), these three; but the greatest of these is charity (love). I Cor. 13:13.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Paul Was Not Afraid.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Courage in the Night.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Christian Love Is and Does.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Love, the Law of Life.

By way of Athens the apostle Paul and his co-workers came to Corinth, one of the great commercial and social centers of Greece. It was a city known for its magnificent architecture and its patronage of the fine arts, but even more widely known for its abandonment to vice and wickedness. Here Paul, the apostle of faith, demonstrated that his faith was rooted in love, and it was to the Christians who were dwelling in this infamous spot of corruption that he addressed his supremely pure and beautiful discourse on love.

The first portion of our lesson finds Paul at Corinth, and provides an introduction to the study of the love chapter from I Corinthians by showing from his experience that

I. Love Is a Fact, Not a Theory (Acts 18:1-4).

The man whom we now recognize as perhaps the greatest preacher and teacher of Christian truth who ever followed the Lord Jesus Christ "came to Corinth." That great and busy city in all probability knew nothing of his arrival and cared nothing for his message. No one met the distinguished messenger of God and received him into a home of comfort and honor.

But God had not forgotten him. For we read that Paul "found a certain Jew"—a convert to Christ, and his noble wife, and "abode with them." Persecution had sent Aquila to Corinth, and he was there for Paul to find.

And the humility of loving service expresses itself further in the fact that the one who was to bring Corinth the glorious message of the gospel did so at his own cost. He labored with his hands at the trade which he, as every Jewish boy, had been taught by his father. Christianity does not ask, "What will ye give me?" but "How much can I give?"

In his first letter to the church which grew up at Corinth we find the exhaustively rich chapter in which Paul so fittingly describes true Christian love. It is impossible in any short discussion of this passage to make a complete study of it, but we note

II. Four Truths About Love (I Cor. 13:1-13).

1. Love is superior to the other graces (vv. 1-3).

Life has many excellent gifts and men seek after them. How do they compare with love? Glowing eloquence, the far-seeing eye of the prophet, mountain-moving faith, self-sacrifice—without love they all lose their worth; in fact they are nothing. All the attainments of men apart from Christ are vain and empty.

2. Love is necessary to the other graces (vv. 4-7).

There is a sense in which love is not so much a grace in itself as the underlying and motivating power, which shows in every fine and noble expression of Christian character. Study these verses to see how patiently and unselfishly love works.

3. Love is permanent; other graces fail (vv. 8-12).

Some gifts will cease, for there will no longer be any need for them. They are temporary in their value or simply a means to an end. But love—it began with God in eternity and will go on with him through eternity. Why then do we labor and seek after these other graces so diligently and neglect the one grace which is above them all, for

4. Love is supreme (v. 13).

Even over those other graces which with love will abide, namely, faith and hope, love stands supreme. It is the fundamental of all fundamentals. Without it all else is empty and futile. And let us remember, this is not pious theory; it is fact and to be translated into daily life.

Common Sense

Common sense in one view is the most uncommon sense. While it is extremely rare in possession, the recognition of it is universal. All men feel it, though few men have it. —H. N. Hudson.

Most of the wisdom one acquires one can't communicate to anyone else. Each man's life is his own. Dreams no more come true than most suspicions.

One should be glad he has emotions; but keep a rein on them.

It isn't against the output of foolish ideas that society must be well armed. That can't be helped. It must be armed against so many people believing in them.

GENERAL PENSION PROPAGANDA

In an emphatic reply to the National Economy League, and others who would repudiate America's debt to its disabled World War veterans, the delegates to the 37th National Encampment at Denver made it plain that this organization is not advocating general pension for the benefit of able-bodied World War veterans.

Although the V. F. W. has never even suggested compensation or pensions for veterans who are physically fit, the enemies of veteran welfare legislation have spread the general pension propaganda for the purpose of undermining public confidence in organized veteranism. Needless to say, this organization has always confined its pension recommendations to Congress exclusively to the welfare of veterans who are physically unfit.

The recent fight over the cash payment of Adjusted Service Certificates involved an entirely separate and distinct principle. The victorious efforts of the V. F. W. in this direction represents the only steps ever taken by this organization for the benefit of veterans in full possession of their physical powers.

It is too much to hope that anti-veteran groups will now abandon their general pension propaganda, despite the action taken by the delegates at the 37th National Encampment of the V. F. W. These forces will continue to spread this impression that veterans are now being mobilized in a campaign that will force Congress to grant pensions to every man who saw World War service. Veterans must recognize that these insidious lies are conceived merely to pave the way for a reduction in existing benefits for those who are disabled. Furthermore, those who are guilty of disseminating these falsehoods are obviously trying to erect barriers against V. F. W. attempts to eliminate inequalities and discriminating factors in the present regulations pertaining to the care of our disabled.

There is nothing mythical or imaginary about these anti-veteran forces. We know from bitter experience they actually exist and that they are led by individuals who are primarily desirous of protecting their own wealth against the inroads of income taxes. These enemies of the veteran know that income taxes will never be reduced until government expenditures are cut to the point that will permit a balanced federal budget. Moreover, they know the easiest way to reduce federal expenditures is through a slash in veteran welfare benefits.

All veterans owe it to their disabled comrades to join with the V. F. W. in exposing these anti veteran forces that seek only to enrich their own pockets by defaming America's ex-service men as treasury parasites in the eyes of the taxpayers. Veteran interests can be protected only when the people know the truth and it remains the duty of the V. F. W. and its friends to keep the people acquainted with the facts.

Daily Tax Fact

By B. C. Forbes

This is the first time Governor Landon has been quoted in these articles. He says:

“We must not lose sight of the fact that a public debt is just as much a liability to each and every individual as a private debt. The fundamental principles of government finance are exactly the same common-sense principles that we follow in the handling of our own family finances.

“So long as our government follows these principles our people will prosper. They will be able to weather depression, drought and other disasters. But if our Government disregards these principles, it squanders our resources and destroys the public credit.

“Now, what are these principles? In broadest terms, there are four of them:

“The Government MUST guard and preserve its source of income.

“The Government MUST make sure that it gets a dollar's worth for

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

“Doctrine of Atonement” was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, October 18.

The Golden Text was, “Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us” (Hebrews 9:24).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: “For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works” (Titus 2:11-14).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, “Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,” by Mary Baker Eddy: “What we most need is the prayer of fervent desire, for growth in grace, expressed in patience, meekness, love, and good deeds. To keep the commandments of our Master and follow his example, is our proper debt to him and the only worthy evidence of our gratitude for all that he has done” (p. 4).

Supreme Court Rules In Favor Of Jos. Sam Perry

The Illinois Supreme Court ruled on Monday that the name of Jos. Sam Perry as candidate for Representative in the General Assembly must go on the ballot for the November election.

This ends the final chapter of a bitter struggle in which Dominic A. Romano, the other Democratic Legislature nominee, has attempted to assure his own victory by removing Perry's name from the ballot.

Acting as his own attorney, Perry obtained a writ of mandamus directing the County Clerks of Will and DuPage County to print his name on the ballot. The high court's order also directed Circuit Judge L. Wilson of Joliet to expunge as void a previous order entered by him removing Perry's name from the ballot.

The first proceedings were brought by Romano when he filed objections with the Secretary of State seeking to eliminate Perry from the race as successor nominee to Representative Michael F. Hennebray, who died after winning the nomination in the April primary. Failing there he went into the Circuit Court of Sangamon County at Springfield where he sought to compel the Secretary of State to accept his objections. Mr. Romano again lost, but later instituted similar proceedings before Judge Wilson in Joliet. After a fiery verbal exchange between the Will County Jurist and the DuPage County Democratic leader, in which Perry charged prejudice on the part of the court, Judge Wilson denied his request for a change of venue and his plea to become a party to the suit. Thereafter Judge Wilson granted Romano's request for a writ, and ordered the two County Clerks to omit the name of Jos. Sam Perry from the ballots, holding the Senatorial Committee had no authority to fill the vacancy created by Hennebray's death.

This was Perry's cue to carry the entire matter before the State high court at Springfield by an original mandamus action. Here the young Wheaton attorney repeated his accusation of partiality on Judge Wilson's part and contended the order by Judge Wilson was void for a number of reasons, one because of the Jurist's refusal to permit him the right to be heard and show his interest in the case.

The Supreme Court's ruling Monday leaves two Democrats and two Republicans contending for the three General Assembly seats in the 41st Senatorial District. Warren Wood and Lottie Holman O'Neill are the two Republican nominees.

State highway police have been arresting truck drivers for overloads in this section this week. Tuesday a number of negro truck drivers hauling coal from Joliet to Chicago were picked up on 143rd street for overloading. One driver had an overload of 7,000. The cases were to come up before Judge Louis Raschke.

Last Sunday morning Rev. John Mullen former pastor of the Orland Park M. E. church went to Western Springs to preach his first sermon in his new charge. Royal Glahn sang a solo. After the sermon the congregation called a special meeting and voted to close up the church as they were so heavily in debt that they could not carry on any longer. So the membership was transferred to the M. E. church at LaGrange. This action on the part of the Western Springs church came as a great surprise to Rev. Mr. Mullen who has been without a church since. It is understood, however, that the District Superintendent is making efforts to locate Rev. Mr. Mullen some where.

Rev. M. J. Mulford of Apple River the new pastor of the Orland Park M. E. church preached at this church Sunday morning. Rev. and Mrs. Mulford expect to move into the local M. E. parsonage this week.

The Orland Park R. N. A. met on Thursday night in regular monthly session.

The dance held by the Orland Democratic club in the Goodings Grove dance hall last Saturday night drew a very large crowd.

The Orland Park M. E. Ladies Guild held their annual bazaar and chicken supper last Thursday night. Over 286 persons were served and the affair was a big success financially and socially.

Last Friday the members of the Orland Park M. E. church tendered a farewell party to Rev. and Mrs. John Mullen in the church parlors. They were presented with $200.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville Schmadeke moved to Joliet last Saturday where Mr. Schmadeke is engaged in the undertaking business with Eugene Harris.

The annual chicken dinner given by the Ladies of St. Michael's parish in the church hall was very largely attended.

ORLAND SCHOOL NEWS

This last week has been a busy one on account of reviews, six weeks tests and book reports.

We have two new large mats and a couple of smaller mats for our entrance and exit doors. There is no reason for mud to be brought in now during bad weather.

An interesting experiment Mr. Linden performed for the General Science class this week was one which showed how layers of sediment are formed. In some cases a large part of the recent history of a region has been worked out by careful study of the strata of sediment in lake beds. Specimens of stratified sedimentary rocks were passed around the science class for members to examine.

Richard Miller takes credit for staining and varnishing a museum case which is to be used by the science class for specimens of various kinds which they will be studying.

A meeting of a number of the students who are interested in dramatics was held last Thursday. It has been decided to select a play which will be appropriate to present for a Thanksgiving program.

It's amusing to ride with some people and hear the present-day automobilist criticize the construction of highways.

He wants highway engineers not only to build roads straight and wide but mark them so that all problems confronting him in driving will be called to his attention. Then he proceeds to violate all the laws of decency and safety, and pays absolutely no attention to the markings on the highways.

If we want wide roads, sloping ditches, wide shoulders, and all the other safety measures on our highways, we ought to be sporting enough to use them correctly.

His determination to "protect the taxpayers' dollar," a determination which calls for vigorous prosecution of a current suit in circuit court to regain more than $500,000 misappropriated by former county officials, has been termed by political experts as "one of the most courageous pre-election declarations which ever has been made."

Mr. Loughran plans a whirlwind finish to his campaign, with personal appearances and "man-to-man" talks planned for nearly all rural and urban districts.

2000 Bills Were Introduced In Last Legislature

More than 2,000 bills were introduced in the last session of the General Assembly in Illinois. Only a small proportion of these bills were and, of necessity, could be enacted into law. But the impossibility of intelligent consideration of this enormous volume of proposed legislation resulted in the death of many good and important measures and the enactment of hastily considered legislation. This condition was rendered the more acute because of the practice of the General Assembly doing little or nothing until the session was well advanced.

Bernice T. Van der Vries, Republican candidate for re-election as representative in the General Assembly of Illinois, from the Seventh Senatorial District, in order to improve this condition of affairs favors the establishment by law of a Legislative Council, composed of members of both parties in the Assembly, whose purpose shall be among other things, to hold down the number of bills, to secure opinions as to their constitutionality, Miss Marie Leonard, dean of women at the University of Illinois, was seriously injured and Dr. Maude L. Etheredge, professor of hygiene and medical adviser in charge of the women's division of health service at the university, received minor injuries in an automobile accident.

Divers and dredging equipment were called on to recover bodies of two men who were drowned when they drove a car into an open draw bridge and dropped into the Illinois river at Lacon, thirty miles north of Peoria. The men were identified as Vernon Buck, thirty-nine years old, of Lacon, and Bert Hertridge, forty-two years old, of Sparland. Both were rural mail carriers.

Dr. Clinton Lee Scott of Peoria was re-elected president of the state convention of Universalist churches at the 99th annual meeting held in Galesburg. Mrs. Holbrook Mulford of Oak Park, was elected president of the state women's missionary association, and Rev. Donald K. Evans of Clinton heads the Sunday school association. The centennial convention will be held in Chicago.

George Huff, director of athletics at the University of Illinois, died in Champaign after an illness of five days. Funeral services were held in the university auditorium, and "G," as he was known to all students and graduates, was buried in Rose-lawn cemetery in the shadow of the $2,500,000 memorial stadium he built as a tribute to the University of Illinois' war dead.

The villages of Mount Prospect and Marengo, cited before the state sanitary water board in a hearing held in Chicago to show cause why they should not be ordered to stop pollution of streams, were given thirty and sixty days, respectively, to abate the nuisances. Mount Prospect was charged with emptying sewage into the Des Plaines river, and Marengo into the Kishwaukee river.

Clyde Mann, a Williamson county deputy sheriff, and three other men faced charges growing out of the burning of a roadhouse owned by A. E. Hartwell, near Johnston City last February. Sheriff Zollie Carter disclosed that indictments were returned against Mann as well as Charles Farris, Elmo Farris and Jesse Williams. Charles and Elmo Farris, it was disclosed, operated a rival tavern near the one burned.

The Illinois commerce commission entered an order reducing the electricity rates of the Commonwealth Edison company and effecting a saving of $3,000,000 a year for more than 900,000 Chicago consumers. The commission also dismissed the application of the company to increase its rates to cover payment of the 3 per cent sales tax, which will save the consumers another $1,500,000 annually. The commission ruled that the company must continue to absorb the tax.

State championship honors were divided among Champaign, Richland, Knox and Livingston counties in a round of judging contests held at the University of Illinois college of agriculture of 4-H club boys and girls and vocational agricultural students of the state. Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building
Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Some time ago I reported in these columns that Mr. Roosevelt had sent a commission to Europe to study consumer co-operatives.

Six Men, Six Views

I said at that time that the commission was likely to find itself unable to reach an agreement concerning a report to the President on the consumer co-operatives and that in the event they were able to reach an agreement, the publication of their findings would be delayed until after the election.

The commission has returned to this country and has gone through its labor pains to the end that there are six different views, an opinion by each of the six different commissioners concerning the value or lack of it that consumer co-operatives have.

But it is important to know developments concerning this commission because it appears that by engaging in an investigation of the consumer co-operatives, the President has awakened a number of different interests in our own country to the fact that there are some kinds of co-operatives which are not helpful. The fuss stirred up by failure of the six commissioners to reach an agreement makes it seem unlikely that there will be any unanimity of opinion in congress if and when Mr. Roosevelt attempts to gain action in a legislative way to encourage creation of these co-operatives. In other words, if a move is made in congress, or if the Chief Executive attempts to force congress to enact legislation favorable to consumer co-operatives, we are likely to see a vigorous legislative battle. Personally, I hope that happens. Unless that end materializes, there is every likelihood that the average person who has not access to full information will be inclined to favor consumer co-operatives, without realizing he is lending his influence, whatever it may be, to fostering institutions that in the end are certain to cause heartaches and financial losses.

I am in a position to say that the one thing upon which the President's commissioners were able to agree was that consumer co-operatives in Europe constitute the focal point for radicalism. Not a single consumer co-operative was found, I am told, that was not controlled, managed or inspired by radicals of one breed or another, mainly, communists. These hotbeds of radicalism constitute "pressure groups" that have been able to impress governments in the various countries of an ability and an influence that do not actually exist with them. That is to say, these groups, like minority groups everywhere, are cohesively organized and they are vocal, in addition. The result is they have been able to force upon peoples in many countries restrictions over private and independent initiative, or to gain for themselves exemptions and privileges not accorded to others. The result is an obvious alignment of peoples into fresh factions, the tendencies of which are dangerous.

It may be news to many persons that we have consumer co-operatives in this country and that these agencies or units already are being fostered by the United States government. I refer to the activities of Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell, who has installed in the resettlement colonies various and sundry consumer co-operatives. It may be news as well to many to learn that Mr. Tugwell has spent almost two million dollars in financing these co-operatives to get them started. And the third bit of news respecting this circumstance is that a book written by James Peter Warbasse is being used as a guide for the creation of these consumer co-operatives in federal resettlement projects.

Tugwell's Activities

Now, the name of James Peter Warbasse may not seem important. Many persons have written books, but there are not many volumes extant in the United States that advocate changes in the form of our government. Yet, there are propositions in the volume to which I have referred which do just that and these books, as I have said, are serving more or less as a guide for the people whom Professor Tugwell has "resetled."

With this brief presentation of the facts, it seems to me it does not take much imagination to see the basis upon which the promoters of the consumer co-operatives are building their structure in this country. Taking these facts into consideration with the information brought back by those who made the study for Mr. Roosevelt, it is made to appear at least that a foreign link is somehow or other being forged, and that link, I believe, is designed as a fundamental unit in the general radical program to change the form of our government as well as the form of our national life. I can arrive at no other conclusion.

Another Phase

There is still another phase of this general proposition of consumer co-operatives that ought to be of interest to every producer in this country. Let us assume, for example, that they were perfect in organization and management; that they prospered and expanded in numbers and that they were rendering genuine service to the people. If that condition were to obtain, does it not occur as a natural question that with so much strength, the consumer co-operatives would eventually establish a class alignment between producer and consumer? It seems to me that the natural course of events would lead to this end, and if it did lead to this end I am afraid that because there are more consumers than there are producers, the producers would get the dirty end of the deal. They would be short-changed because they would be outnumbered.

This phase seems the more important because the food stores, food fields generally, are the sectors in which these consumer co-operatives operate best. As a matter of fact, the food field is the most fertile field for experiments anyway and here is quite apparently another experiment that has fastened, or is fastening itself as a parasite upon the agricultural industry of this country.

I know there has been some argument that the consumer co-operatives are the answer to the effort to destroy chain stores. That is not so. Chain stores in foreign countries have licked the co-operatives. They have virtually destroyed them where the co-operatives attempted to drive the chain stores out of business. It becomes important then to recognize that while the United States has many chain stores, it has not now and never will have as many chain stores as it has independents.

Again, here is a threat to independent business men, particularly to the small shop owner, whether he be in a large city or in the thousands of small towns and villages where the owners of such stores are important to their communities and pillars of strength in our national society. If the consumer co-operatives get going, I predict a further decline in the number of independent merchandise houses throughout the United States. For that reason, if for none of the others that I have outlined, it does seem important that the consumer co-operatives move in this country should be stopped in its tracks and that those responsible in an official way for encouraging this sort of thing should be shorn of power.

It may seem a far cry from the farm field to the price of beer as a working man finds it, but there is a direct connection and recent developments again demonstrate the fact that our whole economic structure is quite closely related. There is an increase coming in the price of beer. Either the working man and others who like beer are going to pay more for it, or else they will get a smaller glass. The answer is that ingredients entering into the production of beer have increased in price to such an extent that, according to official figures, the brewers are now paying about $1.50 more for the things that enter into the production of one barrel of beer than they did when the sale of beer again was legalized.

This circumstance is significant for the reason that it shows conclusively how tampering with the currency upsets the general balance within our economic structure and results sometimes in displacement of markets and sometimes in diminution of sales. In the case of beer it probably will result in a displacement of markets, rather than any decline in the amount of beer consumed, despite the fact that the ultimate consumer will be paying more.

This condition is of interest to agriculture generally because it has always been contended by the proponents of open sale of beer and whiskey that a substantial new outlet for farm crops was made available by the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. Rather, it was a restoration of an old outlet that existed before the Eighteenth amendment was adopted. But there has been a combination of circumstances, largely the result of governmental meddling, that has mitigated against the farmers obtaining full benefit from repeal. These may be enumerated as follows: Devaluation of the dollar, crop restriction under the Agricultural Adjustment act, higher taxes, and a tendency on the part of the Roosevelt administration to increase imports from abroad.

In the case of the devaluation of the currency, the main purpose, as announced by the Roosevelt administration, was to increase prices. It has had that effect and has made the brewers pay more for the hops they must import from abroad, and they must import hops because our own production is insufficient.

"The Man Who O-O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History
by FRANK E. HAGEN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FARMERS' CHAMPION

OF ALL the leaders of third party movements, probably no one has caused the two major parties more concern than did Gen. James B. Weaver of Iowa. For he was the nominee of two new parties which, at two different periods in our history, capitalized on the unrest of the farm vote and in one case he definitely contributed to the overthrow of the party in power.

Weaver was first the standard-bearer for the Greenbackers, a party which came into existence in 1868 because of the dissatisfaction of the farmers with the financial policies of Grant's administration. They were inflationists who demanded that a large amount of paper money be issued without regard to specie payment. They received their name from the fact that legal-tender notes were printed in green and called greenbacks. In the campaign of 1876 they nominated Peter Cooper, the New York philanthropist, but he polled only 80,000 popular votes and did not receive a single electoral vote.

In the congressional elections of 1878 the Greenbackers cast a million votes and the Republicans in power looked apprehensively to the presidential campaign of 1880, especially when the Greenbackers nominated a man from the agricultural West. But their fears were groundless, for the Greenbackers could muster only a little more than 300,000 votes and, although Garfield won over Hancock by less than 10,000 popular votes, he got 214 electoral votes to his opponent's 155.

Twelve years later the Republicans had much more to worry over when Weaver bobbed up again, this time as the nominee of the Populist or People's party which declared for free silver, public ownership of monopolies, postal savings banks and an income tax. In the state and congressional elections of 1890 they carried the legislatures of Kansas and Nebraska, elected nine members of congress and forced 34 others, Democrats and Republicans, to pledge themselves to carry out Populist ideas. In the presidential campaign of 1892 Weaver polled more than 1,000,000 votes in the West and South and corralled 22 electoral votes. The Populists also carried several state legislatures and sent five senators to Washington.

"SMITH FOR PRESIDENT"

SINCE the United States has more people bearing the name of Smith than any other family name, it is only natural perhaps that there should have been more presidential candidates by that name than any other.

The first was Joseph E. Smith, founder of the Church of Latter Day Saints and prophet of the Mormon religion, who in 1844 condemned the policies of both the Whig and the Democratic parties and announced his candidacy for the presidency. However, his martyrdom at the hands of an Illinois mob in June of that year cut short his political career.

Four years later another Smith was in the field as a candidate—Gerrit Smith, the New York philanthropist, who was one of the founders of the Liberty party in 1840 and its candidate for President in 1848. In that year he was also endorsed for the presidency by the Industrial Congress at its convention in Philadelphia. Again in 1852 Smith was the candidate of the Liberty party and again he was endorsed by another group, this time by the Land Reformers. In neither case did Smith or his party figure very prominently in the election.

In 1876 there was another one of the name in the presidential race.

He was Green Clay Smith, a native of Kentucky, a veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars, rising to the rank of brigadier-general in the Union army before resigning to take his seat in congress to which he had been elected while in the field. Re-elected to congress, he resigned to become the second territorial governor of Montana. After three years of service in the West he resigned to enter the ministry of the Baptist church in Washington. Soon afterwards he was chosen as the first presidential nominee of the modern Prohibition party.

Just as this "dry" Smith failed to win in 1876, so did a "wet" Smith fail to win half a century later. For Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic candidate in 1928, suffered the fate of all his predecessors—defeat.

Males has much to interest visitors but the Cathedral of St. Rombold is the outstanding attraction of the city. It was commenced in the early Twelfth century and took 200 years to complete, and is one of the finest Gothics in Belgium. It has a solitary western tower, 324 feet in height and out of proportion with the rest of the building. Its clock face is enormous—more than forty feet across and nearly twice as large as Big Ben on the houses of parliament in London.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

BILLY MINK MAKES HIMSELF AT HOME

THE big woodpile between the barn and the henhouse in the farmyard Billy Mink had discovered, was a regular castle for Billy. That is what it was, a regular castle. Billy is so slim that he could slip through the openings between the sticks in much the same way that Striped Chipmunk pops in and out between the stones of the old stone wall. Billy doesn't need much room, and he soon found that down underneath that wood were little chambers plenty big enough for him to curl up in.

The first thing he did was to make himself thoroughly acquainted with that woodpile. He found every opening that led into or under it. He learned every little passage it contained. He picked out one of the best of the little chambers down underneath in which to curl up to sleep when he was tired. No one could get at him under that woodpile. He felt as safe there as ever he had felt anywhere in all his life. It made him chuckle to think how safe he was there, and all the time living right close to those two-legged creatures called men, who delight in killing such little people as Billy. As soon as he had become thoroughly familiar with that woodpile, Billy set out to explore the surroundings. His new home suited him, but a home without food would be as bad as no home at all, so Billy started out to see what chances there were of making a good living.

First he visited the henhouse. It didn't take him long to find a way under the henhouse, and that there was a hole in the henhouse floor in a dark corner through which he could slip with ease. But Billy didn't go inside that night. Billy possesses a shrewd little head. He had had experience enough with men to know that it was best that they should not know that he was anywhere about. He knew that those hens belonged to men, and that the instant they found one killed or missing they would begin to hunt for him. So, though the smell of those hens made Billy's mouth water, he decided that he would see what other food was to be found.

From the henhouse, Billy went over to the big barn. This was another place just to his liking. Underneath it was dark, the very kind of a place Billy liked. There were holes up through the floor. Billy sniffed at the edge of the first one he came to, and he knew right away who had made that hole. It had been made by Robber the Rat. Billy's eyes sparkled. It would be much more fun to hunt Robber the Rat and his relatives than to kill stupid, helpless hens.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

EVERYDAY FOODS

THERE is no more tasty breakfast or luncheon bread than:

Graham Gems.

To one cupful of sifted graham flour add one cupful of sour milk, one beaten egg, half a teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of soda, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and three tablespoonfuls of shortening. Bake in gem pans.

Coffee Cake.

Warm three-fourths of a cupful of shortening, beat three eggs, stir in half a cupful of sugar and a cupful of raisins, mix all with the shortening and add to five cupfuls of light bread sponge. Mix well, add flour and stir until as thick as the spoon will mix. Set into a pan to rise and when light spread in shallow pans. Cover with soft butter, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon well mixed and set to rise. Bake when light.

Banana Dessert.

Slice perfect bananas lengthwise into halves, spread with raspberry jam and put together sandwich fashion. Lay on a glass plate and serve with whipped cream sweetened and flavored; garnish with a cherry.

Simple Dessert.

Place a layer of shredded pineapple or any good flavored fruit in a glass dish, cover with cake or cookie crumbs, add more fruit and finish the top with crumbs. Over all heap whipped cream sweetened and flavored. Serve cold.

Raisin Cookies.

Stew two cupfuls of raisins and chop fine. Cream together one cupful of butter with two cupfuls of sugar, add two well beaten eggs, the raisins and two tablespoonfuls of sour cream, one tablespoonful of grated nutmeg, two tablespoonfuls of cinnamon, two teaspoonfuls of soda, with flour enough to make a soft dough. Bake carefully for they burn easily.

Rocks.

Cream one cupful of butter or sweet shortening, add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, two beaten eggs, two and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, add spices, dates, walnuts, all together making a cupful. Drop by spoonfuls on a baking sheet.

HOW LONG?

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

HOW long have land and sea contended! And has the contest ever ended? The sea rolls out and bears the sand, The sea rolls in and builds the land, And yet, it seems to me, the strand Grows every year a bit more splendid.

How long has right with wrong contested, But little wrought, yet little rested, Applause not always for the knight Who fights forever for the right, And yet, it seems to me, more bright His honor every time it's tested.

How long must good the good endeavor, With hate so stubborn, sin so clever? Hate seems so hard, and sin so strong, Yet does it matter much how long? Because, it seems to me, the wrong Must change, for right is right forever.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis
© Public Ledger, Inc.

STUDY of hands by type, remember, is the important first stage through which you must progress to the more complicated meanings of lines and other elements within the palm. The outstanding characteristics of the seven types are treated individually in these lessons. Memorize them carefully in order that you may have an accurate gauge of hands you analyze.

Second. The Square Type of Hand.

The outstanding characteristic of this type is the squareness of palm from edge to edge and from the base of the fingers to the line of the wrist. The fingers are of medium length, well placed and symmetrical, with pronounced squareness of shape and very little taper. The nails are broad, well shaped. The joints are seldom prominent.

The thumb of the Square Type is much longer than that of the Primal Type, is set much higher on the hand and stands well out from the palm. The thumb of this type is always well shaped, the inner side of the nail joint sloping back to the nail edge in a firm but graceful arc. The palm and underside portions of the fingers are moderately fleshed, but are firm and have none of the pillowed appearance of the coarser Primal Type.

Possessors of Square Type hands are nearly always practical, serious thinking, dependable folk who get things done. They may always be relied upon to finish the task which requires analysis, a high degree of concentration and perseverance. The Square Type hand is found in every line of endeavor which calls for balanced character, reflective foresight and precision of method. Which accounts, no doubt, for the predominance of this type among surgeons, lawyers and scientists.

Putting Around the House—

Time-Wasting Work of Putting Away Things Others Have Used

WHEN a family is orderly, no one has to do much putting around. When the members are not particular where they put their things, it becomes the undesirable duty of some person to spend much time in just this very thing, putting around. Hours are wasted daily in such trivialities as gathering up newspapers spread about, picking up and putting away gloves, hats, scissors, thimbles, pencils, etc. Whatever it may be that has been in use, and not put away by the user, or has been put in the wrong place, must be placed where it belongs or the house would reflect poor housekeeping.

Nondescript Tasks.

The time given to these nondescript jobs should be given by those who leave the work to others. Putting things away is part of the job connected with using the things, just as much as getting the things out, is part of it. The work is regular and legitimate and only becomes an annoyance when left for the wrong person to do.

Left-Over Jobs.

No person wants her time frittered away doing the left-over jobs of others. Nobody enjoys having a person putting around, either. It is distracting to attention, and disturbing to the nerves. From both the angle of the person who puts around and those who have to endure the annoyance of such activity, there should be some remedy found.

Remedies Suggested.

Mothers can teach their children to put their playthings away when through with them. This is the first step to take. Then she can instruct the little folk to put their outside things away when they come in from outdoors. Children can get into the habit of orderliness by being made to realize that what they don't do, has to be done by mother who is very busy and often too tired to do the extra tasks. Affection will gain the day.

Breaking the Habit.

Adults should consider how to break themselves of the reprehensible habit of leaving work they should do, to be completed by others. If they really determine to stop this bothersome fault, they will decrease the necessity of putting around by the person who heartily dislikes the work, but who, for the sake of order prefers to do it rather than have disorder around.

Sen. Barr Enters Horses In Live Stock Exposition

Will County's first entries for the 1936 International Live Stock Exposition, to be held here November 28 to December 5, consist of 14 purebred Suffolk horses which will be exhibited by Senator Richard J. Barr of Joliet and a pure bred Aberdeen-Angus baby beef which will be shown in the junior classes by 16-year-old Walter Jensen, of Peotone. His steer was a blue ribbon winner at the recent Will County Fair.

This year will mark the 37th anniversary of the Chicago show. According to Manager B. H. Heide, it will be one of the largest editions in its history. Plans are being made he says, to house approximately 13,000 animals in the new amphitheater and pens, built at the Chicago Stock Yards two years ago as a permanent setting for the Exposition. Over $100,000 will be awarded in cash prizes.

Entries for the live stock classes will be accepted until November 1, it was announced. For the International Grain and Hay Show, a department of the Exposition which is the largest competitive farm crops show in the world, entries may be made until November 26.
